

I disapprove of the extension of CALEA requirements to broadband services of any type. I feel that this excessively compromises the presumption of anonymity and curtails the practice of free speech in exchange for ease of law enforcement. In short, I do not place microphones in my living room for the convenience of the local police department and I hope the FCC will not require that my ISP do so.